ABOUT THE ARTIST... Kidwell was exposed to the Fine Arts at an early age as an apprentice for his father who studied on a National Arts Scholarship at the Corcoran Institute of Art in Washington, D.C.

While most sculptors work in traditional materials of bronze and stone, Kidwell uses a variety of found objects, making these creations truly one of a kind. His nostalgic and whimsical works demonstrate the ageless humor of the human condition which persists even in this computer age.

Kidwell's popular creations are on display in many galleries, restaurants and private collections around the world. His presentations have included a one man show at the Smithsonian Air and Space Museum in Washington, D.C.
